Understanding Business Insurance

Business Insurance as part of a Business Succession Plan

Whether your business is structured through a partnership, company or trust, few have effective mechanisms in place for the transfer of equity and/or control if one of the owners is lost to the business due to death, total and permanent disablement, or a critical illness.

In many cases the loss of a business owner from one of these events results in the demise of an otherwise viable business simply because there was no succession plan and funding agreement in place.

A business succession plan, incorporating insurance funding protects your investment and ensures the survival of your business should one of the business owners or a key person die, become totally and permanently disabled or suffer a critical illness.

Who is a Key Person?

Most businesses have one or more key persons whose skill, knowledge, experience and leadership ensures the success of the business. A key person in any business may generally be defined as one whose death, disablement or early retirement, may have an adverse economic effect on the business.

It is important to identify these key people and to analyse and quantify the adverse affect that is likely to be suffered by the business in the event of death, disablement or illness.

There are three basic protection needs that typically apply to businesses:

- Asset Protection
- Revenue Protection
- Ownership Protection

Asset Protection

The most important asset to a business is not the obvious physical assets but the key person or persons.

In the event of a key person's death or disablement, a business may be forced to sell assets to maintain cash flow – particularly if creditors press for payment or debtors hold back payment. Similarly, customers and suppliers may not feel confident in the trading capacity of the business, and its credit rating could fall if lenders are not prepared to extend credit. Outstanding loans owed by the business to the owners (or their beneficiaries) may also be called up for immediate repayment.

What is Asset Protection?

Asset protection can provide your business with enough cash to preserve its asset base so it can repay debts, free up cash flow and maintain its credit standing if a business owner or loan guarantor dies or becomes disabled. It can also release personal guarantees secured by the business owner's assets (such as the family home).

Tax Treatment of Insurance Premiums and Proceeds

Policies which are taken for the purpose of protecting assets, are considered as being non-tax deductible to the business and the proceeds on payment are non-assessable income to the business.

It is prudent for you to prepare a minute which explains the purpose of the policy (ie to protect assets) and the treatment of premiums and proceeds. This is required for auditing and taxation purposes.

Understanding Business Insurance

Revenue Protection

A drop in revenue is often inevitable when a key person is no longer there.

Losses may also result, while finding and training a suitable replacement, from demand that can't be met, errors of judgement by a less experienced replacement, or through the reduced morale of employees.

If there isn't a suitable replacement within the business it may be a costly process and take substantial time and financial inducement to find and train a successor.

What is Revenue Protection?

Revenue protection can provide your business with cash to compensate for the loss of revenue and costs of replacing a key employee or business owner should they die or become disabled.

Tax Treatment of Insurance Premiums and Proceeds

Policies which are taken for the purpose of protecting revenue, are considered as being tax deductible to the business and the proceeds on payment are assessable income to the business.

Deductibility of revenue protection premiums is contingent upon the purpose for cover and how the sum insured was calculated being clearly minuted at the time the cover was taken out and at every review.

It is therefore prudent for you to prepare a minute which explains the purpose of the policy (ie to protect revenue) and the treatment of premiums and proceeds. This is required for auditing and taxation purposes.

Ownership Protection

The death of a business owner can result in the demise of an otherwise successful business simply because of a lack of business succession planning. While business owners are alive they may negotiate a buy-out amongst themselves, for example on an owner's retirement. But what if one of them dies?

The remaining owners must now negotiate with the deceased owner's legal representative, who may be more concerned about the needs of the estate than the needs of the business.

Many business owners mistakenly believe that this contingency has been catered for in the business' constitutional documentation. But often there is no buy-out provision, or if there is, it's often ineffectually drawn up and inadequately funded.

Similar issues arise when an owner is disabled and cannot (or no longer wishes to) be involved in the business.

What is Ownership Protection?

Ownership protection can provide the continuing owners, or their nominees, with sufficient cash for the transfer of the outgoing owner's equity to the continuing owners, should a business owner die, become disabled, or suffer a critical illness.

Tax Treatment of Insurance Premiums and Proceeds

The premiums payable on non-superannuation policies which are taken for the purpose of protecting ownership, are considered as being non-tax deductible to the business owners. The proceeds are tax-free when the beneficial owner of the policy is the life insured or a relative of the life insured.

The premiums on policies owned by the business owners and paid for by the business will generally be deductible to the business, but subject to Fringe Benefits Tax (FBT). This will lead to an increase in the effective cost of the insurance.

The premiums on policies owned by the business owners' superannuation funds are tax deductible to the trustee of the fund. This deduction is usually returned to the member's account (being the business owner). Further, the business owner may choose to arrange additional contributions be made to the superannuation fund which will generally either be tax deductible to their business entity or themselves.

The proceeds of superannuation death benefits paid to most beneficiaries will be tax-free. However, benefits paid to certain beneficiaries—such as children who are financially independent—will attract some tax.

Understanding Business Insurance

Protecting against Total and Temporary Disability (TTD)

Similarly TPD benefits that are paid to business owners under age 60 as a lump sum will attract some tax.

Where superannuation benefits paid to a member or their beneficiaries attract tax, the amount of insurance recommended can be grossed up, so that a desired net amount will be paid.

While the additional insurance means a higher premium, the deduction received by the business entity or business owner for paying the premium will mean the cost of insuring will generally be less than if the insurance was arranged outside superannuation.

Income Protection and Business Expenses cover are complementary insurances which can provide a business owner with regular income to maintain lifestyle and the regular fixed expenses of the business in the event of total and temporary disablement.

When faced with the probability that 50% of employed Australians will, over their working lives, be disabled for three months or more¹, it is clear you cannot overlook insuring your most important asset – your capacity to earn an income.

An accident or illness usually means time off work, added stress and a potential decline in job performance. Add to this the uncertainty of a future income and you have a recipe for financial disaster. Income Protection and Business Expenses insurance can help prevent this.

The fact that it's more likely for you to be away from your work for an extended period than to die before retirement means that insuring your income-earning ability is a must. It is critical for anyone in gainful employment to insure their income, whether it be to look after themselves financially or to provide for their dependants and meet financial responsibilities.

Income Protection

Income Protection Insurance (also known as Salary Continuance) is designed to provide a regular income in the event that you are unable to work due to sickness or injury. Generally, Income Protection Insurance provides a regular income during a period of disablement for up to a pre-determined and agreed benefit period. The benefit amount payable is up to 75% of your income.

When reviewing the insurance needs of your business, it is important to ensure that each owner is able to continue drawing an income in the event that they are unable to work because of injury or illness.

Tax Treatment of Insurance Premiums and Proceeds

The premiums payable on Income Protection policies are generally tax deductible. Income Protection insurance purchased through a superannuation fund is deductible to the fund. If the business pays the premiums on your policy, this is a deductible expense of the business with no Fringe Benefits Tax incurred.

If the income protection policy is owned by the business entity and the insured owns at least 25% equity in the business (as a guide), then the premium is deductible to the business with proceeds paid from the business to the owner assessable in the owner's hands. The insured is required to pay PAYG tax on the benefit in the event of a claim – this will be withheld by the business where the policy is owned by the business.

Understanding Business Insurance

Business Expenses Insurance

A complement to income protection insurance is business expenses insurance.

This type of cover ensures that the portion of your business expenses for which you are responsible will be able to be met should you be temporarily unable to work due to injury or illness.

Business Expenses insurance generally reimburses you for certain regular business expenses, such as rent, utilities, lease costs, and depreciation. It is important to note that not all expenses will be covered. This can help to cover your fixed business costs and keep your business afloat while you are recuperating.

Generally, this type of insurance can cover up to 100% of eligible expenses up to the chosen benefit amount. The maximum benefit payment is for one year's expenses. The reason is that if you are disabled for longer than one year the business would be disposed of or restructured in some way.

Tax Treatment of Insurance Premiums and Proceeds

The premiums payable on Business Expenses policies are generally tax deductible with any proceeds being assessable income.

Buy Sell Agreement

Arrangements should be in place so that:

- Each business owner or their estate agree on the value of the business and;
- Can get the full value of their equity in the business at the time of their departure or death, or;
- To facilitate the continuing business owners financing a buy-out of that share of the business.

There are two main issues that need to be addressed when planning for business succession in your estate plan.

- The legal transfer of control and ownership of the business.
- The way that the transfer of the business will be funded.

The above can be achieved via a Buy Sell Agreement. A properly funded Buy Sell Agreement can be thought of as estate planning for your business – think of the Buy Sell Agreement as a 'business will' and the insurance proceeds as the assets of this will.

A buy/sell agreement has two key components:

Transfer agreement

The transfer agreement is entered into by the principals of a business to provide for the transfer of business interests in certain defined events. The agreement – which can be a part of or separate to a broader Business Succession Agreement can cover:

- voluntary events (such as retirement of a principal) as well as
- involuntary, insurable events (such as death, TPD or critical illness of a proprietor)
- involuntary, non-insurable events (such as bankruptcy of a proprietor or death, TPD or critical illness of a proprietor when adequate cover cannot be obtained for them)

The transfer agreement is traditionally a mandatory contract for sale and purchase of the outgoing proprietor's business interest (sale contract). More recently it involves put and call options under which the remaining proprietors have the right to acquire the business interests of an outgoing proprietor (call option). The outgoing proprietor (or their estate) has the right to sell the interests of the outgoing proprietor to the remaining proprietors (put option).

Understanding Business Insurance

Funding agreement

The funding agreement is critical to Buy Sell Agreements because it obliges the proprietor to take out insurance cover for the contingency that each proprietor may die (or become disabled) during the existence of the business. The insurance policies provide the funding to support the ultimate transfer of the business interests when, and if, it occurs. Insurance is generally the most cost-effective funding mechanism for transfer of business interests arising from death, TPD or critical illness of a proprietor as the alternatives, such as self-funding or borrowing may not be possible or are unpalatable to business owners.

The funding agreement should outline alternative funding mechanisms to cater for:

- succession events that cannot be insured
- business proprietors that cannot be insured and
- situations where the insurance proceeds may not be adequate to compensate the exiting proprietor for the transfer of their interest in the business,

Ownership of the Insurance Policy

There are a number of options available with respect to the ownership of an insurance policy used to fund a Buy Sell Agreement

Funding a Buy Sell Agreement through self ownership or superannuation ownership of life insurance policies will offer you both flexibility in holding and managing the life insurance policy as well as significant practical and taxation advantages over cross ownership or business ownership of the policies.

Self ownership provides a simple means of funding where new owners enter or existing owners leave the business without affecting other owner's entitlements to insurance policy proceeds and without giving rise to any unnecessary tax implications.

Where life insurance policies are not self owned a number of adverse issues may arise from a practical perspective as well as under the income tax laws. These issues are summarised below.

- If a business owner were to suffer a total and permanent disability (TPD) or a trauma event and the insurance policy covering those events is owned by the business or other business owners (business and cross-ownership respectively) then a capital gains tax liability may arise to the policy owner on its receipt of the policy proceeds. Where the insurance policy is self owned (and the policy owner is the original beneficial owner) no adverse tax consequences should arise upon receipt of the policy proceeds irrespective of whether the insurance policy covers death, TPD or trauma or all of these.

- If an owner dies and the life insurance policy proceeds are paid to persons who are not the original beneficial owners of the policy then those persons may be subject to capital gains tax on the proceeds they receive if the policy owner has given other consideration in respect of the acquisition of their interest in the policy. These circumstances may arise, for example, where a policy is originally self owned and then assigned to the company or where the original owner nominates the business to receive the policy proceeds, in return, the business promised to enter into a buy/sell agreement and thereby undertake all obligations arising under that agreement. These issues will not arise where the beneficial ownership of the policy does not change.
- Where an owner of a business retires or leaves the business, they will not have a readily portable insurance policy to take with them if the policies are not self-owned. If the policy over their life is owned by the business and is assigned to the principal when the principal leaves the business, the estate of the principal could possibly be subject to capital gains tax on the policy proceeds when paid as a result of the death of the life insured.
- Where a business entity is a company and is the beneficial owner of the insurance policy, the distribution of the policy proceeds will be taxed as a dividend, a deemed dividend, a fringe benefit or a form of taxable remuneration where the company distributes the money to the continuing shareholder (to fund a purchase of shares from an outgoing shareholder) or where the money is paid to the outgoing shareholder as part of a share buy-back.

Understanding Business Insurance

Utilising other professional services

Note that the payment of the life, TPD and critical illness insurance premiums of a self-owned policy by the business constitutes an expense payment fringe benefit and gives rise to a fringe benefits tax liability for the business where the policy is owned by an employee or an associate of an employee.

Funding a Buy Sell Agreement through superannuation ownership of life insurance policies offers similar flexibility and practical advantages to self ownership as well as the significant taxation advantages over self-owned policies.

Additionally, there are tax advantages and flexibility in terms of funding the premiums as they can be funded concessionally from your before-tax income or alternatively from the investment balance of your super fund (at times when there are cash flow issues).

Further there is usually flexibility in terms of how benefits can be paid – as a pension, lump sum or combination. Benefit taxes can apply in some circumstances, however.

The premiums on policies owned by the business owners and paid for by the business will generally be deductible to the business, but subject to Fringe Benefits Tax (FBT).

Your solicitor should advise on how the business continuation plan should be structured. The transfer of funding agreements are documents that will affect your legal rights and accordingly these documents must be prepared by a solicitor. The solicitor should check the proposed policy ownership recommendation to ensure compatibility with the Buy Sell Agreement.

Furthermore, there are several types of buy sell agreements used in the market and there is considerable complexity in Buy Sell Agreements and the transfer of equity.

Ensure that your Buy Sell Agreement is constructed in consultation with your accountant. Your accountant will usually provide valuation information and any taxation advice relevant to your business succession plan. For example there can be taxation, goods and services tax (GST), capital gains tax (CGT) and stamp duty implications involved.

Additionally your accountant may assist in providing the valuation (and basis of the valuation) of the business.

Finally, your accountant together with your solicitor can assist in:

- Identifying the operating entities that should be included in the Buy Sell Agreement
- The entities or people that own the operating entities
- The debts and equity in each of the entities.
